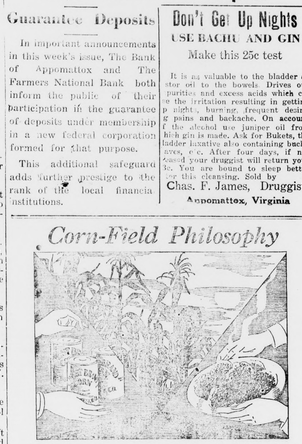
Corn-Field Philosophy



THERE are lots of places you'd like to be this summer—what with reduced steamship rates, and cruises ranged with almost week-end prices. You'd like to be in sunny Provence, say. And looking over the dinner menu, in leisurely holiday mood you'd consider a trout, a bottle of white wine, chicken a la bordie, a loaf of French bread, pommes au beurre, au omelette aux confitures, a ham sandwich at cheese and finally cafe noir.

Corn is Ripe

But let's be philosophic. Perhaps if you were there, something in the smell of summer sunshine would remind you that it's corn you're eating. A tender ears of corn in the garden—and corn on the cob is something to be glad about.

Serve it often while it is in season. And keep on your shelf those good grades of whole grain canned corn which retain the corn-on-the-cob flavor because the corn has been picked ripe and the flavor is sealed in. Did you ever serve corn fritters with fried chicken and introduce them with a delicious lemon sherbet? Here is the way the corn fritters are best made:

Corn Fritters: Beat one egg well and add to the contents of one 8-ounce can of corn or one large ear of corn cut from the cob. Mix together one-half cup flour, one teaspoon baking powder and one-half teaspoon salt. Add to the corn, then by spoonfuls into deep fat—Fry golden brown—and drain well on unglazed paper. Serve hot.

NERVOUS, HEALTH GONE

Mrs. Ruth Powell of 2911 Decatur St., Richmond, Va., said: "After my little girl was born, my health went all to pieces. I was nervous, had no appetite, and could not sleep. Cardui helped me. It was recovery only to take two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription when my strength and health had been greatly improved." Sold by druggists in liquid form, $1.00 plus tax; liquid $1.00. Large size, tablets or liquid, $1.25. "We Do Our Part."

Thousands of Women Have Taken Cardui on Their Mothers' Advice

It is an impressive fact that many women have said they learned of the value of Cardui from their mothers.

What stronger evidence of her confidence in a medicine could a mother have than that she advises her daughter to take it?

Cardui is given the credit for relieving so many cases of womanly suffering that it is widely and favorably known. Druggists, everywhere, sell it.

If you are weak, run-down, suffering monthly, take Cardui. Take it for a reasonable length of time and try it thoroughly. As your health improves, you will share the enthusiasm of thousands of women who have written to say: "Cardui helped me."

(With various and sundry apologies).

Oh the editor man, the editor man,
Sits at his desk at the close of day,
And he sits where the editors sit they say;
His livelihood precarious,
His duties are vicarious,
His creditors penurious,
And enemies injurious,
Subscribers are curious,
And often furious,
And lenders usurious.

Oh the editor man, the editor man,
With patronage perfidious,
Greets salesmen supepcilious,
Friends or foes fallacious,
And merchants mendacious,
(Oh watta life, by gracious)

In church he is most gracious,
Serene as Saint Ignacious,
In dress stores loquacious,
With stories unvaracious,
Sometimes a bit salacious,
His heart is wide and spacious
But his pen most mordacious
He lives most parsimonious,
And is sometimes acrimonious
He writes of things errorious
In essays most euphonious,
Editorials seditious,
And gossip surreptitious,
He scores all things vicious,
Of equanimity suspicious.
Oh the editor man, the editor man,
His job, it is prodicious,
Old age comes on insidious,
And perhaps he turns religious,
If he has been industrious,
His name will be illustrious,
For projects meritorious,
In death he is victorious,
And the game, it was glorious.

And thus on into the night

MEMORIUM

In loving remembrance of our dear sister who departed this life 4 years ago, Jan. 5, 1929. It seemed oh so hard to give you up dear sister, but our heavenly father knew best and lookyou to you to dwell with him on high. It's been four years ago today, dear sister but in our hearts it seems but yesterday. We know you were a loving mother and a faithful sister, a patient trusting child now sleeps beneath the sod. When you were with us you made home bright, but all is gloom there now. For God has called His suffering child to dwell with him on high. Within those gates of God's abode, Happy is she now, free from sorrow and from pain; Heavenly Father, pity her children, in lonliness left here, and each day teach a lesson that will guide them all to thee. We have missed you oh so much dear one, but God's will be done. Further give them grace enough. When the time comes, Sister.

General Assembly In Session; Hears Budget

Faced with a legislative program of full proportions, the general assembly of Virginia got down to business this, after hearing the final messages of John Garland Pollard as governor.

A two year budget was presented by the outgoing governor. The total amount for the biennial is something over $82,000,000.

Among the chief matters to face the solons will be a reduction in the automobile license cost. Senator S. L. Ferguson is understood to favor a plan to scale down fees according to weights, with cars of 3,000 pounds and unde $10.

Another matter will be the state liquor tax. Governor favors retention by the commonwealth of this revenue, rather than allowing it to go to localities.

Senator Ferguson is also held to be opposed to a sale tax or reduction in the gasoline tax at this time. Bills for legalized horse racing in Virginia have been introduced.

Fox Huntsmen Use Autos to Reach Scene of Sport

In the early days of fox-hunting the huntsman usually arose early in the morning and rode his favorite mount to the spot appointed for the chase to begin. Now, however, he serves a writer in the Washington Post, in most instances trainers take the master's mount to the starting place for the hunt and the huntsmen arrive by auto to the tune of the baying of the pack ready and pulling at their leashes for the start of the day's chase.

With the fox in the lead and a whippersin on either side of them, the chase begins. In recent years it has not been infrequent for the huntsmen and hounds to jump a fox within a few minutes after the chase is under way—and then the fun begins.

The fox is known for his craftiness in the thickets and woodlands. Once pursued by the hounds, he will go to any end to throw the enemy off his trail. With baying hounds closing in on him, the fox often makes for a nearby stream in which he has been known to wade for hundreds of yards before leaving from the opposite bank in his effort to throw the pack from his trail. Many a fox has escaped by using his wits, but the hounds are also artfully trained for a long chase and unless the fox happens to be close by a den, he is usually pursued for hours and finally brought down. With the pack closing in on its quarry, the fox puts up a vigorous fight, but the dogs know how to handle their victim and coming in on him as a unit seldom fail to down the fox. Close on the heels of the hounds are the huntsmen who endeavor to log the fox alive, if possible, but in many cases the pack has finished its work before the riders come up.

Lotteries Once Used by Nations to Raise Funds

Lotteries were prohibited a hundred years ago in New York state and Massachusetts many other states followed their lead shortly afterward; in a wave of opposition that swept the land almost as fast as one away with them for all time, as one was thought, in England (1698), France (1836) and Spain (1859); that led Sweden to abolish them in 1841. The public had lost confidence in lotteries, turned with disgust against them after almost two and a half centuries of enthusiasm that had amounted almost to mania in the Eighteenth century.

Annually for more than a hundred years (1720 to 1824) the English government had been raising large sums by this means. The average from 1793 to 1824 had been £246,765.

Queen Elizabeth established the first English state lottery in 1569. It was for the benefit of harbor improvements and other public works. The Colony of Virginia benefited to a results as a colonial lottery in 1612. Westminster bridge, an early water supply system in London, the British museum and many other public buildings and works were erected on lottery proceeds. It contributed also to the payment of war debts in late Seventeenth century England.

Lotteries were resorted to by the American colonies, about three hundred being established in the years preceding 1776. Many of these were for the benefit of needy persons, but others helped to found schools, colleges, highways, bridges, canals, roads, town halls, poorhouses and to pay for many other public benefits. Many were exceedingly respectable in Colonial days.

Ohio's Entrance Into Union

For many years there were states who claimed Ohio became a state in 1802, and Henry Howe, author of the famous "Historical Collections," was to this view. But on February 19, 1906, congress declared that Ohio, by adoption of a constitution had become a state of the Union. On April 30, 1802, congress passed an act authorizing the call of a convention for a convention for Ohio. This convention assembled at Chillicothe November 1, and on the 29th of the same month a constitution of state government was ratified and signed by the members of the convention. It was never referred to the people to ratify or reject; in fact, the convention decided by a vote of 27 to 7 to deny them that privilege. But the Constitution became the fundamental law of the state by the act of the convention alone, and it is this act by which those who claim the 1802 date, declare the state became part of the Union.
